

Sinclair Broadcasting's decision to force their stations to air an anti-Kerry documentary days before the election is a clear example of the dangers of media consolidation.

Sinclair uses the public airwaves free of charge, and is obligated by law to serve the public interest. But when large companies control the airwaves, we get more of what's good for the bottom line and less of what we need for our democracy. Instead of something produced at "News Central" far away, it's more important that we see real people from our own communities and more substantive news about issues that matter.

Sinclair's actions show why we need to strengthen media ownership rules, not weaken them. They show why the license renewal process needs to involve more than a returned postcard.

The propaganda, misinformation, misleading sound bites and inappropriate behavior under the guise of journalism is more apparent than ever during this presidential election time and a threat to our democracy.

I am through disgusted and will make a point of not supporting in any way the media companies that are economic engines and serve the public no good. I will also make a point of continuing my efforts beyond this election! Thank you.

Margaret Hinrichs